GEN. O'NEIL AT SARATOGA.

His Version of the Battle of Lundy's Lane—The Predicted Meteoric Army Appears.

Gen. O'Neil, late commander of the Fenian army, delivered the "Battle of Niagara" address at the Saratoga (N.Y.) Skating Rink on Thursday evening. The following version of the battle of Lundy's Lane is from the address delivered at Niskiyuna, July 21:

After months of toil and anxiety, the Fenians gathered on (or near) the river, and were ready to cross into Canada, but not the enemy's country, as some have stated.

I have often been asked what do I mean by invading Canada, but not the enemy's country. We had no intention to invade the United States, but we intended to invade Canada, to meet the enemies in the west end. From its high position on the river, one can see a vast amount of country, river and country.

The region around Sterling is one of great natural advantages. The soil is productive, and well watered by such streams as Sugar and Twelve Mile creeks. Quarries are found in various places. The uplands are excellent for grain, the bottom-lands for pasturage. Sterling is a village of 1,000 inhabitants, and is a town of 3,000. Its people are intelligent, and a large proportion of them are Dutchmen, are to be found in this section. Almost every hill, and every valley, has its name. Many of the names are historical.
